

TRANSCUTANEOUS ELECTRICAL NERVE LOCATOR

ABSTRACT

A conductive electrode is attached to the clinician's finger and current pulses are applied thereto as the clinician searches for a nerve to be anesthetized by palpating in the region of the nerve. The target nerve is stimulated to indicate when the nerve is located.